

I have recently become aware of a petition filed by the CBA to have themselves designated as a having an "established business relationship" with people of Indiana who have voluntarily placed themselves on the DO NOT CALL list. As one the people directly affected by this petition I am urging to reject this petition. I have accounts with several of these banks, however the extent of my "established business relationship" with them is regarding those individual accounts. While nothing precludes them currently from calling me with questions or concerns about my account, calls to me for marketing other products and services is beyond the scope of that "established business relationship."

I am a working mother and have few quality hours with my children each day. Our dinner hours and after are important to our family relationship. I have long since made it a practice of informing and no longer doing business with organizations who feel their products and services are more important than my children by insisting on disturbing my time with them. I was thankful that the State of Indiana agreed with this practice and willingly placed my name and number on the do not call list. As a result I have been bothered much less, some evenings the phone doesn't ring at all, and I no longer come home to 10 or 15 "non" messages on my answering machine.

I urge you to reject the petition and not weaken the Indiana Do Not Call List.

I father urge you to allow me as a consumer to decide to what extent I want to have a "business relationship" instead of allowing large corporations to decide how my evening hours should be spent.

Thank you for your time.

Tamy Chambers